MERCHANTS VISIT CITY

Milwaukee Men Spend Three Hours Here
Friday—On Fourth Annual Tour of State;

Members of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Milwaukee, numbering about seventy, spent three hours last Friday afternoon in this city. The special train of eight coaches, leaving the port, arrived here from Tomahawk at 12:30 over the "Star" line. A long line of carriages, which had previously been arranged for, were on hand to meet the visitors and convey them on a tour of sightseeing about the city. Points of interest such as the saw mills, paper mill and other manufacturing places were visited, as was also a drive through the residence section. After this portion of the program had been carried out, merchants tarried about an hour in the business districts calling on the retail men and acquaintances among the trade. At 3:30 the train pulled out over the Northwestern road for Antigo at which city the excursionists remained over night.

The Milwaukee men expressed themselves as highly pleased with the hospitality extended them during their stay here and left with nothing but the highest words of praise for—and best feeling toward Rhinelander and her people.

The party traveled in elegant style, their train being made up of two dining cars, three sleepers, two baggage cars and a day coach. The day coach was used as the "guest car" by members of the Milwaukee newspaper fraternity, representatives of three newspapers, O. F. Schuette, Sentinel; Harry Toubey, Journal; C. S. Clark, Evening Wisconsin, who accompanied the Association on the trip. In this car the scribbles prepared copy for their respective papers while the train hurried on its journey from city to city.

Friday was certainly a souvenir day in Rhinelander. The party was fairly loaded down with souvenirs, some ornamental and some useful, advertising the various firms represented, which were generously distributed. There was scarcely a man or child on the streets who did not possess some memento of the occasion.

One good feature of the trip and one greatly appreciated by the merchants and manufacturers themselves was the free use of the Wisconsin Telephone Company's long distance phones to Milwaukee from any point in which they stopped. During their stay here a direct wire was kept open to the Cream City allowing the members of the party to get prompt communication with their homes or business places. No other business was allowed to be transacted over the wires for three hours of the local exchange. H. O. Seymour, the Wisconsin company's representative was with the party.

Men's Hat For Records.

Editor New North:—A Gun Club was organized at Menomonie, June 16th with the following officers: John D. Durkee, president; F. C. Parsons, treasurer; Samuel Oxley, judge of sharpshooters. About five hundred rounds was shot off, and only two of the clay pigeons broken. They would not have lost a pigeon but unfortunately two of the pigeons dropped on a rock pile and broke. There was some good shooting done. The ground between the grandstand and the trap looked as if it was plowed. Sam Oxley would have got down to where the pigeons were but his gun got so hot he had to give up. Mr. Parsons got a very hard kick from his gun. It appeared he shot both barrels at one pigeon in order to make a record. Mr. Durkee is going to get an eight gauge gun from Ironwood for the next shoot.

Explosion at Wausau.

About fifty members of the local Aerie F. O. E. were at Wausau on Friday, Saturday and Sunday in attendance at the state convention of that order. Thousands of Eagles from all parts of Wisconsin were there and as is only customary when members of the feathered tribe flock together roared mightily high. The town was in holiday attire and entertained the visitors in true Wausau style. There were street parades, band contests, horse races, prize fights and dances, and one had to go an awful pace to take in everything. A large delegation from Green Bay was on hand and secured the next convention in 1905 for that city.

Sufferer Broken Arm.

While playing with a number of companions Saturday, Benson, the little daughter of J. J. Remo, tripped on a wire cable stretched across the ground, and in falling struck her left arm, breaking the member in two places. The injury is a serious one as well as very painful. The surgeon in charge however, looks for no bad results although it will take many weeks for the bones to mend.

OLD RESIDENT CALLED.

Mrs. James Keenan Died Saturday Morning After Short Illness.

At a few minutes after six o'clock Saturday morning the spirit of Mrs. James Keenan of this city, departed this earth on its journey to the great beyond. The lady had been ill with pneumonia for about a week, the disease from the first assuming an alarming form. Everything that medical art and tender care could accomplish, was done for her but to no avail, the grim reaper had come to gather its harvest.

Deceased was about fifty years of age and one of the early residents of Rhinelander, coming here with her husband in the year of 1885. She was a lady much respected and held in high esteem by a wide circle of friends. As a member of St. Mary's Catholic church she was a most sincere Christian and ardent worker. Her passing makes a vacancy in the congregation that will forever be felt.

Mrs. Keenan is survived by a husband and six children, two daughters, Ella and Mabel and four sons, James, Patrick, Thomas and Edward, all residing in this city except James who makes his home at Westboro.

The funeral was conducted Monday morning from St. Mary's church, Rev. Peter Schmitt performing the last rites. The services were attended by a gathering of friends and neighbors that fairly filled the church while the procession to the grave was made distinctly noticeable by the large number of carriages in line.

Gave a Stag Dinner.

Mrs. Abbie Donaldson gave a very pleasant surprise to her son Carl last Thursday evening in the way of a "stag dinner" to which were invited the following friends of Mr. Donaldson: Messrs. Ray LaSalle, Bert Bergstrom, E. H. Mikkelsen, S. R. Stone, T. C. Wood, Isaac Thomas, C. F. Connor, Chas. Stevens, C. F. Barnes, Al Dunn, Claud Shepard, J. C. Teal and Luther Brown. The house was handsomely decorated with roses and similar the color tone of the reception room being yellow, the parlor pink and white and the dining room red. A dinner of six courses was served. Palmer's harp orchestra rendering some of their choicest selections during the repast. Following the dinner were toasts and responses, Dr. Stone acting as toastmaster. Later cigars were passed and a social evening enjoyed.

Enjoyed Sunday Picnic.

Several hundred people attended the picnic of the S. H. & E. F. Lodge at Lake Julia Sunday. The day was one of the hottest of the season and many hid themselves away to get the cool breezes off the lake and enjoy the company of the merry throng. Dancing was indulged in on a platform erected for the occasion, the music being furnished by Bruce's orchestra. Boat races also formed a leading part of the program. Refreshments in the shape of ice cream and cake were served during the afternoon. The crowd was an orderly one and nothing occurred to mar the day's fun.

Local Colts Defeated.

The base ball game at Bessemer Sunday between the local nine and a team from that city resulted in the defeat of the Rhinelanderites by a score of 11 to 5. Those who witnessed the contest claim it an interesting one, both aggregations doing fine work. The home boys would no doubt have made a much better showing had they had more practice as Sunday was their first appearance on the diamond this season. The Iron range twirlers had participated in several previous games and were in excellent trim.

To Issue New Directory.

Arthur Langdon and Douglas Anderson, two recent High school graduates, are at work on a new city directory which is soon to make its appearance. The book unlike the last directory issued here will be thoroughly accurate as to names and street numbers and the young men are sparing no time or labor to make it such. The business men are taking kindly to the proposition and are lending their assistance by liberally advertising in the book. When completed the directory will be the finest piece of work ever gotten out here and will be a credit to Messrs. Langdon and Anderson as well as to the city.

Should Take Warning.

Local dealers, who are selling cigarettes, or tobacco packages containing cigarette paper. If any such are, would do well to heed what has recently taken place in Milwaukee. In that city ten or fifteen dealers who have been violating the law in this respect have been arrested and fined.—Stevens Point Journal.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to the friends who so kindly assisted during our recent bereavement, and especially the Lady Foresters, Ladies' Auxiliary of the A. O. U. M. and Rev. Father Schmitt.

J. M. Keenan and Family.

TO BUILD A NEW HOTEL

Patent Brewing Company to Begin Work on a Three Story Brick Structure in a Short Time.

It is finally a settled fact that the Patent Brewing Company will erect a new hotel building on the site of the present City Hotel corner of Brown and River streets. Sam Johnson, landlord of that house and who will also act in the same capacity in the new hotel, was in Milwaukee a few days ago and received assurance that work would be commenced immediately after the Fourth.

The plans call for a forty-four room hotel, 62x62 feet in size, three stories high, the entire structure to be constructed in a substantial manner with solid brick walls. A large barn with a stable capacity for ten teams is also to be erected. The present building will be either moved to some less valuable location or torn down entirely. The company have promised to have the new building completed in three months. This movement toward the erection of a more substantial class of buildings is a welcome one and with the outlook for a steady and substantial growth for the city there should be many more to take the place of old frame structures.

Attempted Suicide.

Arthur L. Spooner, a well known mail clerk running between Milwaukee and Sault Ste. Marie over the "Soo" line, attempted suicide by shooting in his room at the Albert Hotel, Sault Ste. Marie, Friday afternoon. The weapon used was a .28 caliber revolver, the bullet entering his forehead between the eyes, piercing the brain. He was removed at once to a hospital where his injuries were attended to. His chances for recovery are slim and if he does survive will be totally blind for life.

He left a note saying to ship his remains to Minneapolis for burial and also left word to have the company notified immediately of the affair so a man could be secured to take his place out on the night run. Spooner is a single man. The cause for his act is not known but rumor has it that he was despondent over a love affair. He was a young man of exemplary habits, possessed of a genial disposition and had a large acquaintance along his route.

The Lumber Situation.

The Wisconsin Valley correspondent to the Mississippi Lumberman says: The lumber trade remains very satisfactory at this point. As much lumber is shipped now as at any time of this season of the year last year. Prices are kept up well though there is a disposition in some quarters to cut on some items. However, there is nothing in the general situation to warrant anything but the most optimistic feeling as regards to the trade situation. The natural order of things is to complain. It seems to come more natural to complain of the business situation no matter if it is good. "The lumber business is very good indeed," remarked a prominent manufacturer to your correspondent the other day, and he expressed the true sentiment of the trade.

A Continual Strain.

Many men and women are constantly subjected to what they commonly term "a continual strain" because of some financial or family trouble. It wears and distresses them both mentally and physically, affecting their nerves badly and bringing on liver and kidney ailments, with the attendant evils of constipation, loss of appetite, sleeplessness, low vitality and despondency. They cannot, as a rule, get rid of this "continual strain," but they can remedy its health-destroying effects by taking frequent doses of Green's August Flower. It tones up the liver, stimulates the kidneys, insures healthy bodily functions, gives vim and spirit to one's whole being, and eventually dispels the physical or mental distress caused by that "continual strain." Trial bottle of August Flower, 2c. regular size, 7c. For sale by J. J. Reardon.

Mosquitoes Are Thick.

Chas. Olson of Sandy was in the city the first of the week for the express purpose of buying about seven gallons of mosquito dope from our druggists. Mr. Olson, as a member of the Worlen Company's crew, is employed in a cedar swamp, near the above town, cutting railroad ties. He says the mosquitoes are so terribly thick that often the men are obliged to quit work on account of the pests. They are of the large New Jersey variety and are no doubt making their first appearance in this section.

A Pleasant Trip.

The new boat, City of Minocqua, will meet the Northwestern passenger at Tomahawk Lake next Sunday morning at 4:35, make the trip to Minocqua and return in time to take the 10 p. m. train south. Fare 50 cents round trip. Here's a chance to enjoy a day's outing.

ATTENDANCE GOOD.

At Evangelistic Meetings This Week. Future Program Outlined.

Large congregations are being attracted to the Gospel meetings now in progress at the Congregational church.

The widely differing methods of the two Evangelists, Shaw and Standifer, form a strong combination, appealing to many minds. Much religious enthusiasm has already been awakened and a large work for the better life is promised. The spirit of the meetings is broadly Christian with the least possible reference to denominational preference. All Christian people are cordially invited to enjoy the meetings.

Next Sunday several notable meetings are arranged. Rev. Henry Standifer will preach at 10:30. He will also address a men's meeting at 3 p. m. on "Sexual Purity"—or the "Christian Relation of the sexes." All men and all boys over fifteen years of age are invited. Mr. Roper will sing.

At 5 p. m. in the Baptist church, Rev. Shaw will conduct a boys and girls' meeting. He is a great power in such work.

A grand Gospel mass meeting will be held in the Armory at 8 p. m. addressed by Rev. Shaw and others. The meetings will continue each night and afternoon until Friday, July 1. The opportunity for a strong religious uplift is at hand and the people are cordially urged to give it the attention its importance demands.

Robert H. Roper, the singing evangelist of Chicago, who is delighting large audiences at the Congregational church this week, was born in Prince Edward Island in 1857. He came to British Columbia at the age of 16. He was converted at a Methodist revival at the age of 21. For several years after coming to British Columbia he worked at carpentry. In 1886 he began work in the gold and silver mines of the Pacific coast. He has been thoroughly trained to hardship by four years of life in the Klondike country. In 1890 he came to the Moody Institute, Chicago to fit himself for Christian work. Here he has taken voice culture under Prof. Coffin. He has a wife and one child, and is a member of Chicago Avenue (Moody's) church. Mr. Roper has all the qualities which are essential to success in evangelistic singing. He has a baritone voice of marvelous strength and richness and this is the first requisite of good singing. Culture can do much but it cannot take the place of natural endowment. He has brought his voice to a high point of perfection through a long and laborious process of training under one of the leading experts of the land. He is, above all, a man of robust Christian character and genuine spirituality, and he is sufficiently emotional to render religious music effectively. He is fully equal to Sawyer in his best days. The management of the evangelistic campaign now in progress are to be congratulated on their enterprise as shown by securing the services of one so talented, and it is hoped that all the citizens of Rhinelander will hear him before the meetings close.

World's Fair Coach Excursion Via the Northwestern Line.

Very low rates to St. Louis will be in effect on June 27 and 28, for coach excursions to St. Louis via the Chicago & Northwestern R'y. Only $13.75 round trip from Rhinelander return limit seven (7) days. A great opportunity to visit the World's Fair at minimum of expense. Other favorable round trip rates are in effect daily, with liberal return limits, stop-over privileges, etc. Full information as to train schedules, checking of baggage and other matters of interest to the intending traveler on application to Ticket Agents of the Chicago & Northwestern R'y.

Old Is Back.

After an absence of some years spent in the wilds of Northern Minnesota, Old Young is again back in Rhinelander for a few days sojourn among his former companions. He is just the same old Gideon that he was when he once made this section his haunt; doesn't appear a day older and says that he never enjoyed better health.

Old still has the "fishing habit" and about the first offense he committed after his arrival was to run down to Deerbrook in company with John Reardon and spend a couple of days casting, with the usual luck.

Do Not Wait Until You Need It.

The season is again at hand when diarrhoea and dysentery are prevalent. Do not wait until some of your family is taken with a violent attack, but be prepared. A bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy at hand and when needed has saved many a life. Procure it at once. For sale by Anderson & Haman.

Lots for Sale.

Lots now on sale in Moen's Park at Roosevelt. Parties desiring a good and convenient location summer cottages are invited to call. FARM LAND COMPANY, my301ds. Rhinelander, W.

NEW NORTH.
RHEINLANDER - WISCONSIN

Chicago club women are discussing the problem of how to make men eat what they don't like. The easiest way is to tell them it is not good for them.

The California fruit crop is going to be short this year, but Delaware has broken the record by getting through without letting the frost hurt her peaches.

Spain is scheming to have some of her old debts paid by Cuba. It would seem to be extremely foolish on the part of Spain to have any further trouble with Cuba.

A Boston man became a physical wreck after riding 500 miles in an automobile. As a rule it is not the man, but the car, that is the trouble with the wreck.

Eastern doctors were declaring some time ago that we eat too much, but now here comes the Medical Record with the assertion that most people do not eat enough. The average appears to be about right.

A New York woman who was worth $75,000 died the other day and left her husband only five dollars, because he hadn't kissed her for nearly seven years. Permitting the heart to grow cold doesn't always pay.

Immigrants from the lower strata of society have their drawbacks. Still, under the beneficent influence of free institutions we have in times past made some splendid citizens out of what looked like very poor raw material.

Farmers who are fighting potato blight, alfalfa rust, corn smut, rice blast, apple canker, watermelon wilt and peach-leaf curl may expect to learn from the campaign orators what party they should support to cure these evils.

How many party organs are there left among the great newspapers of the country? They can be counted on one's fingers, and the few that are left are not always to be relied upon as truly loyal. The most marked change in American journalism of late years has been its development of independence.

Mark Twain has been grievously stricken, and the man of humor has become the man of sorrow. What effect his wife's death will have upon Clemens' genial humor it is hard to tell, but it will take him some time to recover from the serious blow. The personal loss to Mark Twain promises to become a national loss to American literature.

Brazil appears to have caught the naval development fever, judging from the fact that a bill has been presented to the Brazilian congress providing for the construction of 23 warships. Three of these are to be battle ships and three armored cruisers. Should this building programme be carried into effect, Brazil will have, so far as the number of ships is concerned, naval preponderance in South America.

The Moroccan bandit, Raisuli, who kidnapped an American citizen, stipulates that he shall receive $55,000 to be collected from his enemies, the governors of Fez and Tangier; that he shall be free from all taxes; that the Moroccan troops shall be withdrawn from his district, and that he shall be granted amnesty for all offenses and be allowed to name a new governor of Tangier. What an ideal walking delegate he would make.

The New York Herald tells us that in hot weather we may safely eat oranges, strawberries, apples, pears and bananas, but that watermelons, cantaloupes, cucumbers, cherries, peaches and plums are dangerous. But human nature is perverse, and it will doubtless keep on consuming watermelons, cantaloupes and peaches. And why should it not? These questionable fruits are ripe, and not too ripe. Decried or unripe fruit of all kinds is bad. But when it is as God made it it is good.

Spain is financially better off than when she was loaded down with colonies, which she had for generations administered freely and corruptly, and which she had become incapable of administering at all. If Spain will now establish genuine free government, cut off the horde of privileged officeholders who sap her life blood, reduce her army, provide universal free schools and turn her attention to the development of her own rich and neglected domain and untapped resources she may enter upon a new and lasting era of greatness.

Something scarcely endurable in the way of mosquito plague is needed to make the average man understand that much patient study, investigation and experimentation have established the fact that the mosquito can be controlled and ultimately exterminated; that his presence in a neighborhood is evidence of local negligence and indifference; that he is the most efficient and perhaps the sole agent of so-called malarial infection, and that the cost of eliminating him is as nothing to the value of the benefits it would confer upon suffering humanity.

Applications have been coming in for awards from the Carnegie hero fund, it is said, bearing the names of many candidates, and the judgment of the custodians of the $5,000,000 endowment fund will be followed with much interest in view of the inadequacy of even that princely sum to provide suitable recognition for a small proportion of those whose deeds would seem to entitle them to it. The truth is that heroes are plentiful. In fact, not a day passes in which some act of conspicuous bravery is not reported in the public prints.

PLACES LOSSES AT HIGH FIGURE

REPORT SAYS STAKELBERG'S ARMY LOST 10,000 MEN.

RETREAT MOST DISASTROUS

Rumor That Japs Have Captured Inner Fort at Port Arthur Not Confirmed—Raid of the Vladivostok Squadron.

Paris, June 20.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of L'Echo de Paris says there is a report in Russian military circles that Gen. Stakelberg during his retreat from Vafangow lost 10,000 men in killed, wounded and captured. He adds that this news has created consternation.

Retreating on Foot.

London, June 20.—Gen. Stakelberg's shattered forces are retreating on foot toward Hailcheng. Russian reports state that the railroad is unable to transport more than a few thousand men and the flight of the defeated army apparently is so urgent that there is no time to wait on the arrival of more trains. Besides the railroad has a large task in transporting the men wounded in the battles at Vafangow and Telissu. Eleven hundred wounded, including 35 officers, have reached Liaoyang and 724 wounded men and 38 officers are in Mukden. The Russians estimate their total losses at 2,000 men. There seems to be every reason for Stakelberg's haste to get back to the main army. The St. Petersburg war office announces that Kuraki is at Shiyen with 20,000 men, but believes that he is too late to pocket Stakelberg.

Japanese Transport Destroyed.

Tokio, June 20.—In addition to the transport Hishichi and the sailing ship the Russian fleet sank the Idzumi, a transport homeward bound, carrying a few sick soldiers. Three boats from the Idzumi are not known.

Lacks Confirmation.

Chefoo, June 20.—There is current here a Chinese rumor that the Japanese have captured one of the inner forts at Port Arthur, losing 1,000 men in the engagement. It cannot, however, be confirmed.

Says Attacks Were Repulsed.

St. Petersburg, June 20.—A dispatch from Mukden says that according to trustworthy advices received there an entire infantry regiment with its commander was sunk in the transports Hishichi and Sado. The same dispatch says that according to Chinese statements attacks made by the Japanese on Port Arthur have been repulsed with heavy losses.

Kuropatkin Takes Command.

Liaoyang, June 20.—For the first time since the beginning of the war Gen. Kuropatkin has taken personal direction of the operations and in consequence of his having assumed the offensive results very different from those following recent events are anticipated. The tactics of the Japanese are admired here, but their strategy is criticized, especially with regard to the battle of Vafangow (June 14), which may truthfully be called an artillery engagement. During that battle the infantry extended over the field further than the eye could reach, one division covering six miles.

Raid Is Over.

Tokio, June 15.—The remarkable raid of the Russian Vladivostok squadron evidently is over. The squadron disappeared yesterday off Cape Hanashi, steering to the north, and it has not been reported since. It is assumed to be returning to Vladivostok. Whether or not a portion of Vice Admiral Kamimura's squadron is awaiting the Russians off Vladivostok is a carefully guarded secret. Assuming that Vice Admiral Kamimura dispatched some of his vessels to Vladivostok when he learned that the Russian squadron was off Iki Island, these ships would have ample time to arrive there ahead of the Russians and will be ready to give battle.

Effect of Squadron's Raid.

St. Petersburg, June 20.—Vice Admiral Skrydloff's message to the emperor from Vladivostok, in which he details the operations of the Vladivostok squadron, indicates that he has accounted for at least three of the Japanese transports, besides a suspected collier. The message does not indicate the present whereabouts of the squadron. The fact that the collier was sent to Vladivostok under a prize crew might indicate that the news of the operations of the squadron was brought there by her and that the cruisers are still at sea. The destruction of an aggregate of 15,000 tons of shipping, besides troops and crews, and a valuable cargo of supplies, is considered here as being good showing for the raid made by the cruisers. It is thought that it will have a moral effect and will, besides, necessarily divert a considerable section of Vice Admiral Togo's fleet in an attempt to round up the Vladivostok squadron or to protect the line of sea transport concerning which the Japanese until recently felt so secure. Further news of the movements of the squadron are awaited with intense interest.

Congressman Hitt Is Better.

Washington, June 20.—Congressman Hitt, of Illinois, who is suffering from the effects of an attack of acute indigestion and a severe cold, is better. He is still confined to his room, and in obedience to the advice of his physician, is keeping very quiet. At this time there seems no probability that he will be able to attend the republican convention at Chicago.

REPORT SAYS STAKELBERG'S ARMY LOST 10,000 MEN.

RETREAT MOST DISASTROUS

Rumor That Japs Have Captured Inner Fort at Port Arthur Not Confirmed—Raid of the Vladivostok Squadron.

Paris, June 20.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of L'Echo de Paris says there is a report in Russian military circles that Gen. Stakelberg during his retreat from Vafangow lost 10,000 men in killed, wounded and captured. He adds that this news has created consternation.

Retreating on Foot.

London, June 20.—Gen. Stakelberg's shattered forces are retreating on foot toward Hailcheng. Russian reports state that the railroad is unable to transport more than a few thousand men and the flight of the defeated army apparently is so urgent that there is no time to wait on the arrival of more trains. Besides the railroad has a large task in transporting the men wounded in the battles at Vafangow and Telissu. Eleven hundred wounded, including 35 officers, have reached Liaoyang and 724 wounded men and 38 officers are in Mukden. The Russians estimate their total losses at 2,000 men. There seems to be every reason for Stakelberg's haste to get back to the main army. The St. Petersburg war office announces that Kuraki is at Shiyen with 20,000 men, but believes that he is too late to pocket Stakelberg.

Japanese Transport Destroyed.

Tokio, June 20.—In addition to the transport Hishichi and the sailing ship the Russian fleet sank the Idzumi, a transport homeward bound, carrying a few sick soldiers. Three boats from the Idzumi are not known.

Lacks Confirmation.

Chefoo, June 20.—There is current here a Chinese rumor that the Japanese have captured one of the inner forts at Port Arthur, losing 1,000 men in the engagement. It cannot, however, be confirmed.

Says Attacks Were Repulsed.

St. Petersburg, June 20.—A dispatch from Mukden says that according to trustworthy advices received there an entire infantry regiment with its commander was sunk in the transports Hishichi and Sado. The same dispatch says that according to Chinese statements attacks made by the Japanese on Port Arthur have been repulsed with heavy losses.

Kuropatkin Takes Command.

Liaoyang, June 20.—For the first time since the beginning of the war Gen. Kuropatkin has taken personal direction of the operations and in consequence of his having assumed the offensive results very different from those following recent events are anticipated. The tactics of the Japanese are admired here, but their strategy is criticized, especially with regard to the battle of Vafangow (June 14), which may truthfully be called an artillery engagement. During that battle the infantry extended over the field further than the eye could reach, one division covering six miles.

Raid Is Over.

Tokio, June 15.—The remarkable raid of the Russian Vladivostok squadron evidently is over. The squadron disappeared yesterday off Cape Hanashi, steering to the north, and it has not been reported since. It is assumed to be returning to Vladivostok. Whether or not a portion of Vice Admiral Kamimura's squadron is awaiting the Russians off Vladivostok is a carefully guarded secret. Assuming that Vice Admiral Kamimura dispatched some of his vessels to Vladivostok when he learned that the Russian squadron was off Iki Island, these ships would have ample time to arrive there ahead of the Russians and will be ready to give battle.

Effect of Squadron's Raid.

St. Petersburg, June 20.—Vice Admiral Skrydloff's message to the emperor from Vladivostok, in which he details the operations of the Vladivostok squadron, indicates that he has accounted for at least three of the Japanese transports, besides a suspected collier. The message does not indicate the present whereabouts of the squadron. The fact that the collier was sent to Vladivostok under a prize crew might indicate that the news of the operations of the squadron was brought there by her and that the cruisers are still at sea. The destruction of an aggregate of 15,000 tons of shipping, besides troops and crews, and a valuable cargo of supplies, is considered here as being good showing for the raid made by the cruisers. It is thought that it will have a moral effect and will, besides, necessarily divert a considerable section of Vice Admiral Togo's fleet in an attempt to round up the Vladivostok squadron or to protect the line of sea transport concerning which the Japanese until recently felt so secure. Further news of the movements of the squadron are awaited with intense interest.

Congressman Hitt Is Better.

Washington, June 20.—Congressman Hitt, of Illinois, who is suffering from the effects of an attack of acute indigestion and a severe cold, is better. He is still confined to his room, and in obedience to the advice of his physician, is keeping very quiet. At this time there seems no probability that he will be able to attend the republican convention at Chicago.

PERSONAL PIQUANCIES.

William K. Vanderbilt has named his new racing yacht Hard Boiled Eggs because, he says, it cannot be beaten.

Peary's dash for the pole has been postponed on account of a lack of money. He should go into politics and be paid for making a dash to the pole.

"Yes, said the friends of the family, 'they were married in haste.' "And repented at leisure, eh?" queried the other. "Oh, no," was the reply; "they repented in haste, also."—Chicago Daily News.

FIND MANY MORE BODIES OF DEAD

SEARCH FOR VICTIMS OF SLOCUM HORROR CONTINUES.

FORTY-ONE FOUND SUNDAY

Total Number of Bodies Recovered Is 624—Over 300 Persons Still on the List of Missing.

New York, June 20.—More than 100 hours after the smoldering wreck of the big excursion steamer General Slocum had sunk on Hunt's Point, in the East river, the full extent of the disaster to the St. Mark's Lutheran Sunday school picnicers had not been learned.

Sunday's harvest of dead numbered 41, bringing the total number of bodies so far recovered up to 624. Of these, 553 have been identified, while 31 of the victims now lying at the morgue have not been claimed by friends or relatives. While the list of missing has been cut down somewhat by the identifications made Sunday, 11 new names were added to that roll, thus leaving the total of missing almost as it was on Saturday—something more than 300.

Work of the Divers.

Divers who went to the wreck found the bodies of a woman, a girl and a boy and brought them to the surface. They were burned beyond recognition. The divers said there are more bodies in the wreck, thus bearing out the statement made a day or two ago, after it was thought the wreck had been cleared, that many bodies remained under the entanglement of timbers and machinery.

A life saver, grappling from a raft, brought up a woman of 30 and a girl of 11 years locked in each other's arms. A few minutes later he brought the bodies of a boy of nine years old and a girl of six, apparently brother and sister, clinging tightly to each other. One body was found floating in the river near Riker's island by the crew of a four-corded barge of the Metropolitan Rowing club, while 19 were brought up from the bottom along the beach running from the island down to the chin in the river. Three men working with an improvised grapple, consisting of a block of wood to which many blue fish hooks were attached drew up section of the rail of the upper deck of the Slocum about 30 feet in length. The bodies of four women were clinging to the rail, the fingers gripping the interlaced wire ropes. This is part of the rail which gave way just before the steamer was beached, precipitating 100 persons into the water. While the rail was being brought ashore two of the bodies broke away from it, but were secured immediately; the other two were still clinging to the rail when it was landed.

Held Down by Rocks.

Nine bodies were taken from a pocket under the rocks at the bed of the river near North Brother Island Saturday morning, and five more were recovered later in the day. According to Diver Gilligan, who secured the majority of the bodies, the hole contains a tangled mass of the remains of fifty 50 more. These bodies will be taken up as rapidly as the divers can work when the tide slackens.

Many Funerals.

The funerals of nearly a hundred of the victims of the disaster were held Sunday. In many instances two caskets were carried in the same hearse, and in some cases two and even three hearses bore away the dead of a single family.

Boat Officials Detained.

Coroner Berry said that he had issued an order for the detention of the captain, pilots, engineers and crew of the Slocum. "I learned," said he, "that they were trying to escape, and I asked the police to detain every body who was employed on the boat, as witnesses. Some of them have escaped, and we may never be able to get them. But we are after them and will leave no stone unturned to get them within our jurisdiction."

Secretary Cortelyou, of the department of commerce and labor, visited the scene of the disaster Sunday. He was accompanied by H. K. Smith, deputy commissioner of corporations of the same department, under whose supervision an investigation will be held. Supervising Inspector General Usher and Inspector Rodie. Secretary Cortelyou remained at North Brother Island long enough to witness a number of bodies being taken out of the water. He refused to discuss the situation, but Mr. Usher gave out a statement in which it was explained that the trip was preliminary to the investigation to be made by the federal authorities which, it was promised, would be complete and thorough in every respect. Mr. Cortelyou left for Washington Sunday night and will consult with Assistant Secretary Murray, of his department, this morning. Mr. Murray will then come to this city to be present at the investigation to be made by the steamboat inspectors, which will begin probably on Wednesday.

Lake Captains Warned.

Chicago, June 20.—To avert even a possibility of a repetition of the General Slocum disaster the Chicago government inspectors' office has sent a warning letter to all lake captains. Their special attention is called to the regulations regarding fire drills, and extreme care is urged in the matter of preventing fires of any kind on board, in lamp rooms, kitchens, lunch counters or buffets. Engineers are reminded of the danger of fires in their departments and of their duty to have the fire pumps in working order at all times. Investigation of the lake craft brought to light the fact that while steamships are licensed to carry one passenger to every nine square feet of deck room, no record of the deck area of the steamers is kept.

HUNDREDS OF LIVES LOST

Awful Steamer Horror Occurs in New York Harbor.

Heavily Laden Excursion Boat Takes Fire Off Hell Gate.

SCORES OF VICTIMS LEAP OVERBOARD AND DROWN

Others Remain and Succumb to the Flames—Dead Mostly Women and Children—Latest Estimate of the Dead.

New York, June 15.—At 11:30 a. m. the officials at the Bellevue morgue gave out these figures on the Slocum disaster: The dead recovered, 560. The dead identified, 521. The dead unidentified and unrecognizable, 30. The dead to be identified, nine.

New York, June 17.—Over 700 persons, according to the coroner's latest estimate, lost their lives Wednesday morning by the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum in Long Island sound while off Rucker's Island and in plain view of New York city and Long Island shores.

The disaster likely will equal in numbers and wholly matches in pitifulness and horror the Iroquois theater fire in Chicago last December. It was appalling in its immensity, dramatic in its episodes and deeply pathetic in the tender age of most of its victims.

Victims Women and Children.

As in the Iroquois fire most of the victims were women and children. They were members of the Sunday school of St. Mark's German Lutheran church, bound for their annual excursion up Long Island sound, happy, gay, care free and full of joyous expectations of their day of all days in the year. They went to their death with hands playing, flags whipping in the breeze, and under a fair sky as was ever vouchsafed to a picnic crowd. The 400 children were singing, dancing and waving handkerchiefs and flags in answer to the salutations of those on shore or from passing steamers.

Horror Upon Unspeakable Horror.

The scenes during and after the catastrophe were the kind that make the heart sick. Mothers hugging their children to their breasts in love and terror were forced to choose between certain death in the flames and almost certain death in the water. Some, made frantic by their sudden peril, threw their babes into the swirling waters of Hell Gate, hoping doubtless for improbable rescue, while many were not allowed the poor privilege of choosing, but were forced overboard by the mad rush of the panic-stricken passengers in their efforts to get away from the flames.

Great preparations had been made for the seventeenth annual excursion of the Sunday school of St. Mark's German Lutheran church, the congregation of which is drawn from the dense population of the lower East and West sides, and the General Slocum had been chartered to carry the excursionists to Locust Grove, one of the many resorts on Long Island sound. It is variously estimated that there were between 1,500 and 2,500 persons on board the General Slocum when she left the pier at Third street, East river, though the Knickerbocker Steamship company, which owns the Slocum, officially states that the number of passengers was 875, that being only one-third of the vessel's capacity. It is thought, however, that there were several hundred children in arms, for whom fares are not usually charged on these trips, on board.

At the extreme eastern end of Randall's Island, off One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, there is a stretch of water known as the Sunken Meadows. At this point, just as crowds were watching the gallantly decorated steamer from the shore, the General Slocum took fire, and as the age of the vessel (she was built in 1891) had resulted in the well seasoning of the wood with which she was almost entirely built she was soon a mass of flame. The fire is said to have broken out in a lunch room on the forward deck through the overturning of a pot of grease. The wind was high and all efforts to subdue the fire was futile.

At One Hundred and Thirty-fourth street there are several lumberyards and oil tanks, and as Capt. William Van Schaick, in command of the General Slocum, started to turn his vessel toward the shore there he was warned that it would set fire to the lumber and oil, and so he changed his course for North Brother Island, one of the twin islands near the entrance to the sound, some half a mile away, where the boat partially burned was beached. She sank near this place at 12:25 o'clock p. m., two hours and 25 minutes after the fire was first discovered.

Leap Overboard.

In the meantime the passengers had become panic stricken, and those who were not caught up by the flames rushed to the rear of the vessel, and hundreds jumped overboard into the swiftly running waters. It is alleged that the life preservers were too securely fastened to their holdings to be available, and stories are told of frantic efforts made by strong men to cut them loose; but even if they could have been torn down they were too high up for the children to reach.

An Awful Race.

The race to North Brother Island was horribly dramatic. It was made while the flames, which had been fanned into a fury by the strong head wind, were consuming hundreds of persons, old and young. The scene was one of frightful panic, with women and children jumping overboard and being lashed by the channel whirlpools against the vessel's sides. Women and children were crowded together on the hurricane deck which soon burned away and fell, and it is believed that most of those on this deck were burned. The after rail gave way and the passengers who had crowded against it were pushed into the river. Mothers and children became separated and frantically sought each other, while in several cases fathers and mothers gathering their children together jumped with them into the water. Little children, holding each other by the hand, jumped together and were afterward found clasped in each others arms. It is alleged that men fought with women to escape, resulting in the trampling under foot of scores of children.

Meanwhile the Slocum burned to the water's edge. At 12:25 o'clock, two hours and 25 minutes after the fire was first discovered, she sank. It is estimated that there were nearly 100 charred bodies on her decks. Just after the steamer sank the water nearby was black with bodies. The tug Fidelity succeeded in picking up 58 charred corpses in Hunt's cove off Rucker's Island and carried them into the sound. None of these bodies, it is thought can ever be identified. Heads, legs and arms are burned off and not a shred of clothing is left on any of them.

The scene on North Brother Island as described by the rescuers was a pitiful one. Body after body was washed ashore or brought in by boats and added to the long row on the beach. Fifty-three persons died there while the doctors were attending them. As the bodies of the living and the dead were taken out of the water, those alive were taken to the hospitals on the island or sent across the river to hospitals in Manhattan. Here ambulances from almost all the hospitals in Greater New York and every other sort of conveyance which could be found were put into service. For hours the bodies of the burned and the drowned drifted ashore on the island and between One Hundred and Thirty-first and One Hundred and Thirty-third streets in Manhattan. Some came ashore still alive. Many of these died while others will recover. The scores on the beach of North Brother Island were pitiable in the extreme, as the living and the dead were brought in. The row of bodies stretched along the beach and hysterical women and frantic men went along looking at one after another, searching for children and friends.

Pastor Is Saved.

Rev. J. G. Schultz, the assistant pastor of the church, called at the temporary morgue and identified the body of Mrs. Anna Haas, the wife of the pastor of the church. The coroner, at once gave permission for the body to be removed to the residence of Dr. Haas. Dr. Haas is among the rescued. He, himself, wife and daughter got outside of the rail of the Slocum before the steamer beached. He cannot say whether they jumped or fell or were pushed into the water. He sank and when he rose he found scores about him fighting for life. He failed to find his wife and daughter. With great effort he kept afloat, and was about to give up in despair when a man on one of the tugs picked him up. Of the scores he saw about him when he rose, one by one sank. It is not yet known whether his daughter is among the missing or the dead.

Many May Be Safe.

There are a number of places where the living may have landed, and it is believed that many that are now reported missing are safe, and eventually will be heard from by the officials who have the rescue work in hand. Indeed, a surprising number of persons have been saved, thus cutting the list of missing down considerably, as well as the probable mortality list.

Many Injured.

Many persons who were injured in the panic that followed the breaking out of the flames on the General Slocum, and at least 200 persons were taken to the hospitals. Not a death has occurred so far among these, and many of them have already been discharged.

ILL-FATED STEAMER GEN. SLOCUM.

The General Slocum was built for an excursion boat, and when not chartered for special excursions ran between New York and Rockaway Beach. It was owned by the Knickerbocker Boat company, which also owns the excursion steamer Grand Republic. At yacht races the great size of the boat made it prominent in the fleet of excursion steamers that lined the course. The vessel was launched at Brooklyn in April, 1891. The keel was 235 feet, the deck 250 feet long. Its breadth of hull was 27 feet, overguard, 30 feet. The gross tonnage was 1,231 and the net tonnage 1,012. The boat had two boilers, each 23½ feet long and 3½ feet in diameter, and four furnaces.

Rev. J. W. Johnson was down from Ironwood Monday returning Tuesday afternoon accompanied by his wife and baby. Rev. Johnson is greatly impressed with his new pastorate. He delivered his initial sermon Sunday evening to a crowded church and pleased the people to such an extent that he has been asked to deliver the public oration on July 1th.

Mrs. G. Stevens and children leave tonight for Bagley, this state. After several weeks stay there they will go Rockford, Ill., their future home, where Mr. Stevens has been located for over a year past. The departure of the Stevens family is regretted by a large circle of friends and it is hoped that they will some day return to again make their home here.

Capt. E. B. Crofoot was at Wausau Thursday and appeared before the board of pension examiners in hopes of being awarded a pension. He has not yet learned the result of his mission but thinks that the board will turn him down, owing to the fact that he sustained no injuries while in service and is today as sound and healthy a man as when he enlisted in the C's.

Dr. P. B. Stewart and wife left this week for Island Pond, Vt., to attend the golden wedding anniversary of the doctor's parents. Six children will be present, including one daughter from Leone Ayres, S. A., who has not seen her people for many years. After the occasion Dr. and Mrs. Stewart will make a tour of the north-eastern states expecting to be away several weeks.

The Salvation Army will hold special meetings on June 30th and July 1st. Brigadier Jenkins and Staff Captain Faulkner also Lieut. Harris will be in charge. The Thursday night meeting will be held in our own hall, an admission fee of 10 cents will be charged. On Friday night a grand Salvation Rally will be held at the M. E. Church. Admission free. Everybody come and make these meetings a rousing success.

To Receive Bids.

Bids for laying cement walks on the north and west side of court house square will be received at my office Friday, July 1th. Plans and specifications can be seen at my office. Committee reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

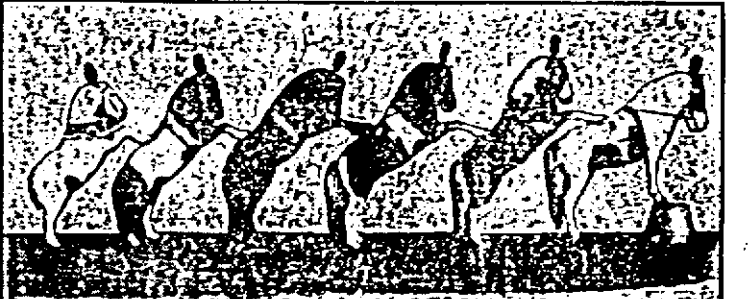

By order of committee.
W. W. Carr, County Clerk.

MARTHA

By ELLA ESSEX DON LAVY

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"It's time you was gettin' over that foolishness, now Martha. You're wastin' the best years of your life waitin' for a man that may be already married. You could 'a' had your pick and choice of any 'round here. You ain't heard nothin' from him for a long time have you?"

Martha shrank from her mother's sharp words, for they were but echoes of her own thoughts. She bent lower over her work, and pretended to be busy with a refractory thread while she answered in a low, constrained voice: "No, mother."

"I thought it would be so, and I told you so. He didn't want no common country girl like you. He wants a girl that don't spoil her pretty hands with work. You throwed away a good chance when you refused Lem Willis; he's got a good farm, and would make any gal a good husband. Now, that's Craig's feller."

"Mother, mother!" cried Martha in sharp, pained tones, "can't you find something more interesting to talk about? Mr. Craig's movements cannot possibly interest us; we live in another world and he in another. As for Lem Willis—well, he is good enough, in his way, and if it will please you to know it, the chance is not entirely lost, and I promised to think it over."

All the afternoon while Martha sat playing her needle, her thoughts had been busy with this subject.

She left the window and drawing a chair close to the fire, sat gazing into the glowing embers. The frelight rose and fell fitfully while her thoughts strayed far back into the shadowy past. She thought of the time when she had come to Seaview to teach the village school, a small red schoolhouse by the roadside—and the pupils came from a distance of two miles and more.

The day had been sultry, and after dismissing the noisy urchins, she had sought a shady brook and stooped over to bathe her heated brow. She recalled the timely arrival of a tall, handsome stranger just as she was making a futile attempt to rescue her sun hat as it floated away on the current of the stream.

That was their first acquaintance. Mortimer Craig spent three months at Seaview. Every morning Martha awoke with the happy thought that to-day she would see him, speak to him and gaze into his glorious dark eyes. Never before had the flowers seemed so beautiful, the trees so green, and the songs of the birds so sweet. The song in her heart filled the world with melody.

Then one evening, when the sunset was nearly over, and the air was sweet with the scent of flowers and shrubs, they left their boat down the river that they might walk back along a shaded path. He had paused before her, taking both her hands in his, and told her of his love. She had lain in his arms while she shyly confessed her love for him. Then he went away.

Not until a year had passed and the first frost of October had again fired the wood with gorgeous splendor of decay, did Martha lose hope of ever seeing her truant lover, and her heart grew sick with hope deferred.

"Well!"

The front door had just closed on Lem Willis and Martha turned to face her mother who had just entered from the kitchen.

"You didn't send him away again did you?"

"No, mother. I told him I would marry him whenever he was ready, and I hate myself for it. I don't love him and never will. Oh, I hate myself—I hate him, and I hate the world—everything."

"Martha, Martha—what?"

Half the last word was lost in the bang of the door which, after hastily snatching a wrap from the rack, Martha had slammed behind her, leaving her mother in stupefied wonder.

Martha sped along the street, not caring whither—only to be alone—alone with her miserable thoughts.

"Martha!" They stood facing each other in the uncertain twilight. Martha found her eyes riveted on the stranger, got no sound escaped her pale lips. A ghost, conjured by her disordered mind, stood before her, and faintly smiled her lips. Then she realized it was no ghost, but a dead and blood man—the man who had thrown her and her love aside—pride came to her rescue and lent her strength and speech. Martha put out her hand in a friendly manner, at the same time saying: "How do you do, Mr. Craig? Your sudden appearance startled me for the moment and I hadn't heard of your return to Seaview."

Mortimer Craig stood with his hands in his pockets, not offering to touch her outstretched hand. Martha found her eyes attracted to his in a way she half resented yet could not resist. He fastened his dark eyes upon her and regarded her steadily for a moment.

"So! While I compensated your dull, monotonous life, you found amusement and occupation—the old thrilling game we all play at more or less." He looked so stern and cold Martha almost feared him, but she could be brave; he should not see how his desertion had wounded her.

"I don't understand what you mean; and you have to fight whatever you use that tone to me."

"You know very well what I mean. How can you reconcile it to your conscience to even enter into an engagement with a man you know is your inferior, one whom you do not love? Admit you do not love him!"

"I admit nothing to you. I do not recognize your right to question me in this matter." Martha turned to leave him, but he caught her arm.

"You shall hear me—that, at least, is my right now; later, we shall see."

"I know what you would say, but I've made up my mind and nothing can change it." Mortimer laughed an odd constrained little laugh.

It had grown quite dark, but the room was flooded with a mellow light from the wide, old-fashioned chimney. Mortimer stirred the embers and replenished the fire. "No, we want no other light," as Martha was in the act of striking a light. "We will sit here," drawing up an old-fashioned settle. For this she waited all these long months, even years. After all she is only a woman, Martha, and—

"Unbelievable, why don't you say it! I know you want to."

"Perhaps that is the right word. Yet I intended to marry you." Mortimer had slipped his arm around her waist and held her close, although she struggled to free herself.

"Mr. Craig have you forgotten my truth is pledged to another?"

"I remember only that you have been a very foolish little girl to try to give your hand to one man when you love another. No, you needn't try to deny it. Your eyes, your voice, your manner all betray you. Before we go any further, let me explain. I own that in the beginning I did a wrong in teaching you to love me. When I left Seaview I will admit, I never expected to see you again, although I loved you—you were so different from the girls I had known all my life. I recognized the social gulf between us. I also knew my family would not receive you as a daughter. I was dependent upon my father for every farthing. Often when you talked of the great and noble deeds of self-made men—men who had risen from humble stations in life without either wealth or influence; had overcome great difficulties to achieve success, I felt very inferior. But I was indolent. My father had wealth enough for us all, and there was no need for me to do aught but enjoy life in my own way.

"Then one day there came an awakening. I found myself a mere puppet, subject to the will of my family. For the first time in my life I acted upon my own judgment. My father threatened to disinherit me unless I married a girl they had chosen for my wife. She had more wealth than I would ever have, and she was willing. With your image in my heart, I could not consider it."

Martha listened shyly, and once or twice while he was speaking she looked up into his face.

"I will not go into detail—it is enough to say I left home, and unaided, I am proud to say, not only achieved success, but have made my family proud to own me. I am again in their favor, and better still, independent to do as I choose, thanks to your influence."

"And you hadn't forgotten me all this time?"

"Forgotten you? No, never, darling; you have been my one thought that has urged me on to a nobler, better life. My education had not been neglected, and I had needed something to spur me on, and I found that in you. I need you all the time. Now do you understand why I am going to marry you, and why nothing can change my mind? Now, will you yield gracefully, of your own accord, or shall I compel you?"

"And Lem?" questioned Martha, with concern.

"Oh, Lem he begged! He can take care of himself; besides, I won't take much to console him; his pig and cows can do that." Mortimer strained her to his heart while their lips met in a long, lingering kiss.

A MAGNATE'S CONFESSION.

Down by the heavy stable, on a sultry summer day, Cy Jones went to the checker board and challenged me to play.

I thought I stood a chance, for I had watched the game a bit; but he started for my king row. I was responsible when he hit it. And every body laughed and said I had myself to blame.

For the first time that Cy Jones would let me beat him at the game.

That's my earliest disappointment. It seemed bitter. I went and got a book and settled down to work severe.

I beat some other players, and then as the time went by I came to know I was a better player than I had supposed.

As years went by I had some luck and prospered more or less. And yet there's just one little thing that spoils my whole success.

I know that I am envied as a most successful man.

Likewise admired or hated for the way that I can play.

TO CROSS IN IRON EGG.

Norwegian Sailor Plans to Travel to St. Louis Exposition in a Curious Boat.

A Norwegian sailor named Bruce intends to travel from Norway to St. Louis, for the exposition, in a curious boat of his own design. It is made of iron, and egg shaped, being entirely without an aperture, except that there is a small turret rising from it, with four windows, to enable the craft to be steered.

The vessel is being made at the Askes and mechanical works. It will have a sort of center board keel, capable of being raised and lowered. It will be rigged with a mast and lateen sail.

Bruce is looking out for three other Norwegians to go with him. He expects the journey will take two and a half months.

Fashions for Mademoiselle

IT WOULD be impossible to imagine anything daintier and prettier than the new summer fashions in blouses for young girls. Not only are all the new styles so simple and becoming, but the materials in which they are carried out are endless in their variety, and so charming in color and design, that nothing more is needed beyond a simple skirt in voile or linen, and a wide-brimmed hat, with a ribbon trimming, to make quite an ideal picture of a young girl's summer costume.

The bad old days have happily long since departed, when any kind of ill-fitting blouse, worn as often as not on an elastic and over the skirt, was deemed quite good enough for a girl to wear, even though it might be her last year in the schoolroom. Mademoiselle demands nowadays, and rightly too, quite as neat and trim a blouse as any that her elder sisters may deign to wear, and although the sensible modern girl would naturally scorn the criminal foolishness of tight-lacing, she nevertheless prides herself upon owning a well-proportioned figure, and takes trouble to see that her corsets are made in a good shape and that they fit her comfortably, giving her sufficient support without undue pressure.

The two very pretty summer blouses which we illustrate have been specially designed to meet the requirements of the young girls. Although they are suitably simple in design, they are very smart in effect, and at the same time are made in such a way that even the most evil-disposed of landresses could scarcely find occasion to tear or spoil them, although they might be sent to the wash many a time and oft.

The first of the blouses sketched might be made in Irish linen. It would look equally pretty in plain linen, or in one of those laces that are faked lightly with white. Stitched strappings of the same material form a kind of yoke, and appear again upon the sleeves, each strap finished with a little linen-covered button. The turn-over collar should be of white linen, while the tie might be of the same colored linen as the blouse, with white embroidery on the ends. This blouse might be carried out successfully in any soft shade of pale green, pink, mauve, or blue, finished at the waist with a deep belt of lustrous silk ribbon. The wide-brimmed hat, in sun-burnt Yeddah straw should be trimmed with a ribbon trimming, to make quite an ideal picture of a young girl's summer costume.

The second of these two blouses, just around the hem of the skirt, there is a full blouse of lace, but of a finer kind. This same lace, by the way, is used for the collar, and also to form the ruffles which finish the elbow sleeves. The coarser lace, bordered with the glass silk pleating is arranged to form a cape effect on the bodice, on to which the sleeves are gathered in quite a new way, while there are little wavy ruffles of dark velvet at the throat, and also on the sleeves.

A full ruche of pompadour floral chise ribbon encircles the crown of the hat, which might be made either in fine white chip, or in satin straw to match the color of the dress, supposing that a pale-lavender voile should be chosen to make it. Here and there among the folds of ribbon there are clusters of pink roses and pale green leaves. This sketch is worth considering from another point of view also, as it would make a charming frock for bridesmaids, either in soft silk, as already suggested, or in crepe de chine. If a transparent fabric should be chosen for the frock, the wavy lace insertion might be outlined with little bouillonnes or puffed gatherings of mousseline de soie or chiffon, while the lining should be either of soft satin or glass silk.

ELLEN OSWONDE.

very hot weather I like those composed of two frills of pleated muslin, made for the most part in white, and tied with ribbon of the same shade as the frock.

Among gowns for morning wear there are small checks in red and white, blue and white, and black and white, which are still holding their own despite the fact that they have become rather ordinary. Still, they are essentially delightful toilettes for the Bobs in the morning, especially when the skirt is very full (and trimmed with three or five enormous flat tucks and little insertions of white washing beading), and the simple bodice has a yoke piece of embroidery and a few tiny flat tucks, punctuating over a wide band or sash, and rather neat sleeves with turned-back cuffs of embroidery, worn with a Breton sailor hat.

For the toilette de reception and the more elaborate afternoon frocks, again do white mousseline de soie and white muslin reign supreme. These seem to consist of endless numbers of ruckings, gauings, pipings and insertions of Valenciennes lace, indescribably elaborate and yet maintaining a certain chic simplicity. White muslin always sounds simple, however intricate it may be in reality.

Our leading ateliers are making a specialty of mousseline de soie in blue or black white shades, mixed with the coarsest white silk guipures or dentelle Valenciennes; these are in contemplation of fashion; these are in contemplation of fashion; these are in contemplation of fashion.

Then for very notable women, some of our couturieres are making white taffeta frocks with silk frills, edged with fringe after the manner in vogue during the early Victorian era, and most attractive little pelerine effects fastening with beautiful Louis XV. paste buttons.

with a soft scarf of silk or gauze ribbon to match the color of the waist belt. A plainly-gathered skirt in the same Irish linen worn with this blouse would make a charming costume for a girl.

The second blouse which we illustrate is intended for afternoons, and might be worn with a skirt of pleated voile, and a waist belt of very soft white kid, drawn through a square kid buckle. The material should be flowered muslin or French balise, with tiny sprays of rosebuds and forget-me-nots on an ivory-white ground. Three fairly wide tucks, fairly stitched, decorate this pretty blouse on either side, in front, in company with bands of cream-colored mimosa lace insertion, the lace being arranged to simulate the form of a bolero both back and front.

At the wrists also the same lace forms a cuff, into which the muslin is finely tucked. An embroidered stock collar in fine white lawn, and a tie of soft black satin ribbon, gives a pretty finishing touch at the throat. The becoming hat with its mushroom brim, has a full ruche of satin ribbon round the crown, in the same shade of pink as the rosebuds. Carried out in embroidered Indian muslin, or in soft washing silk, this design would also be very pretty.

This is just the time of year when mademoiselle demands something new and pretty in the way of a Sunday best summer frock. The frock for Sunday best, or for smart occasions generally, of which we give an illustration, might either be carried out in white soft washing silk, or in silk voile, in some delicate shade of lavender grey, pale green or turquoise blue.

The skirt, which is closely gathered at the waist, is trimmed with two wide bands of wavy lace insertion, the insertion being bordered, above and below, with a narrow knitting of glass silk to match the color of the silk or voile, of which the dress is made. Below the second of these two insertions, just around the hem of the skirt, there is a full blouse of lace, but of a finer kind. This same lace, by the way, is used for the collar, and also to form the ruffles which finish the elbow sleeves. # YOUTH'S COMPANION

A PEEP INTO DREAMLAND.

I'm going to tell you of something I saw, I saw it very own self. I was sitting alone in my little room, in front of the nursery shelf.

The nurse had just gone to bring up my tea. The same as she does every night. And I was quite happy there all by myself, watching the dim firelight.

When all of a sudden I saw the toy boy Unfasten his little toy drum. And beckon across to the little toy girl To put down her toy doll and come.

The white woolly dog that I'd left on the floor Wagged his tail as they came down his way. And the old yellow donkey I keep in the box Poked his head out the side with a bray.

Just then I am sure that they heard Susan's voice. For they stopped in the midst of a game. And they hurried right back to the mantel-shelf. In the very same way that they came.

I tried to tell nurse the way they came down. And asked how it ever could be; But she just shook her head, and laughed as she said: "Come and see what I've brought for your tea."

FUN AT A BIRTHDAY PARTY.

How a Clever Girl Entertained Her Young Friends in a Way They Will Never Forget.

Have you ever been to a cobweb party? If you have—for they have been given—you will remember what fun you had and what a delightful novelty it all was.

Some time ago one of our girl readers wanted to give a birthday party to some of her friends, and she determined that it should be quite different from the usual sort of party that boys and girls have.

Her brother and younger sister were quite as anxious as she to have the party a success, and they thought and thought, with this result:

They got a lot of pretty souvenirs, one for each guest, and to each one they tied the end of a spool of thread. Then they hid the souvenir in a place which only could easily reach, but would hardly think of looking for, and proceeded to wind the thread in and out, up and down, above and below half the objects in the room, and then out the door and into another room, under sofas, behind pictures, about everything they could lay their hands on.

Then came the second souvenir and the second spool of thread. That one was served in the same way, crossing the first thread a dozen times, until that, too, was all used.

At last some 20 souvenirs had been hidden and some 20 threads leading to them had been so tangled, wove in and out, across and around each other, that one could hardly stir about the house, which looked inside like a huge cobweb.

As soon as each guest entered the parlor or she was handed one of the threads and told to follow where it led, and a prize would be found on the end of it. Such a time as they had! The youngsters were soon as badly mixed as the threads, and in a very little while the whole crowd resembled flies caught in a web of a hungry spider.

By the time the souvenirs were found that was almost the happiest party that ever cooled off with ice cream, and all traces of stiffness that sometimes spoils parties were gone forever.—Boston Herald.

A FUNERAL IN BEETLEDOM.

Bury Insects Dug a Grave and Buried Dead Comrade with Neatness and Dispatch.

"Aunt Lu" sends to the Wellspring the following account of the burial of a beetle which she witnessed. All that it needed to make it quite human was that there should have been a beetle with prayer-book and spectacles to read the burial service:

Out in a garden path one day, I came across a dead beetle—black and smooth. No sooner had I seen it, than two of the same species came out of the grass at the side of the path, and began vigorously to push away the earth from around the little creature. They worked rapidly, and apparently with a plan. My curiosity was aroused, and I stopped to watch the proceeding. At once, as though called by wireless telegraphy, a dozen or more beetles appeared from all directions, and they immediately began to dig in the earth, with great vigor and alacrity, until they had completely buried their comrade, and in a few minutes the ground was smoothed over, and they had all disappeared, hurrying and scurrying in all directions—gone in almost "the twinkling of an eye," and there was nothing to tell of that great in the beetle-world.

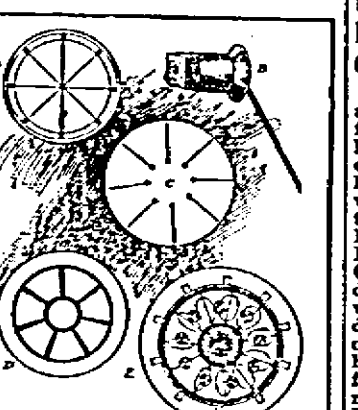

"Beetles are such poor bugs. They were always slow. It always took me as if 'They don't know where to go.' But surely these beetles knew where they were going, and their walk was anything but slow. I never saw such quickness in the insect world.

FUN FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

How to Make Living Pictures Which Will Amuse All Who May Happen to See Them.

To make living pictures provide yourself with a sheet of stiff white cardboard and a spool, one end of which you cut off squarely. Stick the spool on a piece of strong wire and bend the wire in such a way that the longer end serves as a handle, while the other end keeps the spool from sliding off (see B). Now, take your compass and draw a circle seven inches in diameter on the cardboard. Cut the circle out carefully. Draw a second circle three-eighths of an inch from the edge of the first circle and divide it with a pen into eight parts, which you connect with the center of the circle by lines. A third circle, which you draw, is seven-eighths of an inch from the edge. Between the two inside circles, at each of the divisions, cut out square windows, as shown in A. Cut out a square at the center of the circle to fit over the end of the spool, which is cut off squarely.

Now, to make the living pictures. We cut out circles six inches in diameter and copy C and D as they appear in the drawing. Figure E shows a circle with a design of living pictures attached to the large circle with the little window.

D is a wheel with seven spokes. We attach the circle to the large circle on the spool with the help of a little wax, and stand before a large mirror, turning the front of the circle toward the glass. Now we give the circle a quick turn with the hand, looking through the little windows at the same time. The wheel will appear to have all its eight spokes instead of seven and will turn in the opposite direction from the circle we hold in our hand. Figure C will show the pendulum of a clock in motion. Figure E, a ball flying through a ring.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

RATS HELD CONSULTATION.

After a Number of the Rodents Had Been Drowned They Resorted to Winning Strategy.

There is a story told of a certain hotel in a large city where the rats increased, despite dogs, cats and ferrets. A few were bagged with a rifle, but soon they grew too wary for that. Traps and poison were matters of household experience, and even the young and inexperienced in random knew enough to avoid them. Then the manager hit upon a new expedient.

He swung a lid on a barrel with a swivel, filled the barrel half-full of water, and fastened a lamp of cheese in the center of the lid. As soon as a rat alighted on either side of the lid, over he would go into the barrel, and for awhile rats were drowned by the dozen.

Then it was evident that they held a rat council, for the number of the victims grew steadily smaller. Sometimes of a morning there would be two or three rats in the barrel; oftener there were none at all. The observant manager felt that they were all the time trying to figure out how to get that cheese. Sometimes two rats would get on the edge of the barrel opposite one another at the same time, and balance the lid as they crept in toward the center. This worked well until one or the other forgot the need of caution, when both fell in.

Finally one old rat mastered the game. For several nights the cheese disappeared, and there was no rat there in the morning to show for it. One night the manager caught the rat in the act of dropping from some of the pipes right in the center of the lid. He balanced himself for a moment, then quietly nibbled at the cheese. When he had satisfied himself, he carefully moved off along the line of the swivel, and dropped to the floor, safe.

"That was the point where I gave it up," said the manager, in telling the story. "There are some other people figuring on it now, but the kind of man who is able to beat those rats will probably be able to command a higher salary than I can afford to pay."—N. Y. Tribune.

QUEER HIDING PLACES.

Paris Woman Saved Her Hoard from Burglars by Concealing It in a Lemon.

All devices of women to save their money from thieves are not as successful as was that of a Paris business woman. Her apartments were recently visited during her absence by a couple of enterprising burglars, who had good reason to believe there was rich booty there. In spite, however, of the most earnest search they were unable to find anything of value and took themselves off disappointedly. Nevertheless, a sum of some 20,000 francs was lying in the room they had explored, and that in a most prominent position. Mme. Reutz had, in fact, devised an ingenious hiding place by scooping out the inside of a lemon, putting her bank notes inside, and then leaving it on a plate on a side table. This transpired in the course of the complaint laid by her at the local police station. One would like to have seen the burglars' faces when they read the papers next day.

in stupor. Martha sped, long whither—only with her miserable "Martha!" They other in the uncertain found her eyes riveted, yet no sound escaped her, ghost, conjured by her dissonant, stood before her, and frightful lips. Then as she realized it, a ghost, but a flesh and blood man, man who had thrown her and herlo aside—pride came to her rescue and lent her strength and speech. Martha put out her hand in a friendly manner, at the same time saying: "How do you do, Mr. Craig? Your sudden appearance startled me for the moment and I—hadn't heard of your return to Seaview." Mortimer Craig stood with his hands in his pockets, not offering to touch her outstretched hand. Martha found her eyes attracted to his in a way she half resented yet could not resist. He fastened his dark eyes upon her and regarded her steadily for a moment. "So! While I compassionated your dull, monotonous life, you found amusement and occupation—the old thrilling game we all play at more or less." He looked so stern and cold Martha almost feared him, but she could be brave; he should not see how his desertion had wounded her. "I don't understand what you mean; and you have no right whatever to use that tone to me." "You know very well what I mean. How can you reconcile it to your conscience to even enter into an engagement with a man you know is your inferior, one whom you do not love? Admit you do not love him!" "I admit nothing to you. I do not recognize your right to question me in this matter." Martha turned to leave him, but he caught her arm. "You shall hear me—that, at least, is my right now; later—we shall see." "I am cold, Mr. Craig, and am going home." "Very well, I am going with you." "Would you come uninvited?" They finished their walk in silence. At the door of her home Martha turned toward him appealingly. "My mother is away, and I—"

TO CROSS IN IRON EGG.

Norwegian Sailor Plans to Travel to St. Louis Exposition in a Curious Boat.

A Norwegian sailor named Brude intends to travel from Norway to St. Louis, for the exposition, in a curious boat of his own design. It is made of iron, and egg shaped, being entirely without an aperture, except that there is a small turret rising from it, with four windows, to enable the craft to be steered. The vessel is being made at the Aalesund mechanical works. It will have a sort of center board keel, capable of being raised and lowered. It will be rigged with a mast and lateen sail. Brude is looking out for three other Norwegians to go with him. He expects the journey will take two and a half months.

Attractive toilette, trimmed with lace; chest line de sole and corselet with little buttons.

Little of the successful French dressing. Most of those made with a very full, pouching blouse-like bodice, high collar decorated with transparent stitching. Many are very pretty, and are worn with white taffeta bands, but I consider those of kid and suede are more keeping. With these lines are worn hats, the very simplest description. For
